PUT YOUR FEET IN THEIR BOOTS

Help Wanted 1942: There's Plenty of Work on the Alaska Highway

"Men hired for this job will be required to work and live under the most extreme conditions imaginable. Temperatures will range from 90 degrees above zero to 70 degrees below zero. Men will have to fight swamps, rivers, ice and cold. Mosquitoes, flies and gnats will not only be annoying but will cause bodily harm. If you are not prepared to work under these and similar conditions, do not apply."

- Recruitment poster for the Alaska Highway Construction Project

Mystery, Intrigue and Hardship

These were the ingredients of the Alaska Highway that changed the north forever and shaped the people of Dawson Creek forever. The stories today are as enduring as the highway itself.

Check out the boney fingered man standing right in the middle of Dawson Creek's main traffic circle. This location marked the beginning of one of the world's largest and hardest construction jobs in 1942.

Built for War

The Japanese bombing of Pearl Harbor in 1941 forced the American and Canadian governments to re-evaluate the security of North America. They needed a secure supply route to haul military goods and materials from the lower states to Alaska and it had to be completed in less than one year. The story of the men, the equipment, and their triumphs over nature to open the northern passage is as legendary as the men who risked their lives to build the highway.

From Calm to Chaotic

In the spring of 1942, the peaceful agricultural town of Dawson Creek was home to 600 people. Their connection to the bigger world was by rail. Arriving from the south, this provided transportation for the grains and cargo that sustained the community.

Then, without warning, this quiet small town burst at the seams, literally overnight! US troops and Canadian civilians began arriving with their equipment, supplies and plans for the construction of the highway. In a matter of weeks, the town's population swelled to 10,000! There were soldiers and equipment and noise and mud everywhere! The people of Dawson Creek never looked back; their future was being constructed right before their very eyes.

Punching through 1500 miles (2414 km) of Canada's most untamed wilderness, the construction plans for the Alaska Highway were astonishing.

Even with today's equipment, the project would be challenging. But in 1942 the harsh climate, crude equipment and hardships of the land made the reality and scope of the project unbelievable.

Permafrost, muskeg, mosquitoes, gnats and extreme cold were common problems. In the summer months, the insects were so horrific that the men wore netting at all times.

In one of the earliest and coldest autumns ever recorded, the heavy equipment took a beating. Harsh temperatures of -70 Fahrenheit, froze lubricants, seized transmissions, and snapped axles. Equipment had to be kept running 24 hours a day, shutting them off was out of the question.

The combination of brutal cold weather and the scarcity of spare parts meant many vehicles were abandoned and left to the elements where they broke down. For environmental reasons, today most wrecks have been removed, but there are still collections of antique heavy equipment to be explored along the highway. The 'Must See' collection of these relics is in the Fort Nelson Heritage Museum, 282 miles/454 km north of Dawson Creek.

The cold temperatures not only froze the equipment, it brutalized the men too. There were many instances of frostbite that year and several deaths were attributed to the freezing cold.

Yet, in a little over 8 months of grueling construction, the Alaska Highway was completed. On November 20, 1942, Mile 1061 (known as Soldier's Summit) celebrated the official opening of the "Alcan" Highway with a ribbon cutting ceremony.

If you love history and construction and are curious about the men who built the highway, or if you have a connection to the military, the Alaska Highway House, Dawson Creek's main attraction, is the #1 source of insight and inspiration.

Located across the street from the famous Mile 0 Post in downtown Dawson Creek, the full-feature PBS Documentary and carefully preserved artifacts are yours to explore at your own pace. See for yourself what day-today life was like for those who opened the north with the Alaska Highway.

Want to learn even more? Stories can be found in various locations throughout our community including the Visitor Centre, the Art Gallery and the lobby of the George Dawson Inn.

The Northern BC App can be downloaded to your smartphone and help direct you to all the sights. You can even take the story home with you. Staff in our Visitor Centre and other businesses in town can help you choose just the right keepsakes to share with your family and friends.

The Mile 0 Post: A World Famous Icon

A must do, as you prepare to head north or leave the Alaska Highway heading south, is have your photo taken at the Mile 0 Post in the centre of Dawson Creek. This world famous icon has been photographed with countless visitors and locals and been the object of many pranks over the years.

Want to be in the photo yourself? Pop into the Alaska Highway House and ask the staff to help. They will see you safely cross the street and take your photo with your camera.

There have been three Mile 0 Posts over the years with the first being destroyed by a drunk driver, and the second the object of many pranks and kidnappings. The post you will see was installed in the 1980s and is made of steel and flies the flags of our nation, our province and our community.

Alaska Highway House

A stroll through Alaska Highway House will take you back to the 1940s and the life of the soldiers and civilians who worked to build the highway in nine very intense months. Their stories are told through first-hand accounts, film, music and replicas of the equipment that was used. Enjoy tunes from the era, climb into an actual 40s era military jeep and step into the Quonset hut where meals were served and soldiers warmed up at the end of the long hard days. Don't miss the powerful and emotional one hourlong PBS film about the construction of the highway.

"Brutal, harsh & unimaginable."

- This is how the soldiers / builders described conditions on the Alaska Highway construction project. The interactive exhibits are designed to give you a glimpse into the hardships and challenges experienced by the crews.

MEN & MACH

- Hum along to those favourite old 40s era tunes.
- Try to imagine minus 60 degrees Fahrenheit (-50 C) then imagine living in a tent with just a barrel stove for heat!
- Or brush your hand across the coarse woolen army issue clothing — pretty rough.
- Find out what a corduroy road is, what it looks like and what it was used for.
- Have a close look at the construction details on the scale model of the famous Kiskatinaw Curved Wooden Bridge.
- Hear the Alaska Highway Opening Ceremonies taking place at Contact Creek at the completion of the highway.

Railway Station Museum

All Aboard! Step into the Railway Station Museum and walk in the footsteps of the US soldiers who arrived in the cold spring of 1942 to build the Alaska Highway. Tour the stationmaster's quarters for a glimpse into the lifestyle that began when the rail arrived in 1931. And don't miss the natural history museum that includes artifacts from the First Nations who lived here before European settlers arrived. The museum has a small theatre where > you will sit and watch a one hour movie about the construction of the Alaska Highway. Dawson Creek was a tiny agricultural community when the railroad arrived to help deliver the finest grain and largest harvests in the Commonwealth from the prairies of the Peace River Region to markets overseas. When WWII began, there were still only a few hundred people calling Dawson Creek home. Between March and May of 1942, tens of thousands of troops stepped off the train and hiked west to the tent city that was the staging ground for the construction of the highway. Overnight, Dawson Creek was on the map!

Surveyor Statue

A tribute to the tens of thousands of men (yes, tens of thousands!) who arrived in Dawson Creek in the spring of 1942 to build the Alaska Highway, the Iron Surveyor statue stands as a reminder of the amazing feat and of those who lost their lives in the effort. Standing above the traffic circle that leads you onto the famous highway, the surveyor points northwest along the path that became first a mud track and finally the paved highway you will travel today.

Created by local sculptor, Karl Mattson, whose family has ranched in the region for generations, the statue is welded from scrap metal from local farms. The clothing and surveyor's transit are true to the style of the 1940s.

Emergence – 1942 Alaska Highway Trencher

This historic trencher actually worked on the construction of the Alaska Highway in 1942 and sat in a private collection until 2016 when it was donated to the City of Dawson Creek to be made into a work of public art by a group of talented local artists and unveiled August 11, 2017.

It celebrates Canada's 150th Anniversary of Confederation, the 75th Anniversary of the Alaska Highway and 118 years of Treaty 8 Agreement.

Look closely, you will find many treasures that tell the story of the histories of the Indigenous people of the area and the settlers who arrived decades before the highway was built. Look again, because you are sure to find something you missed the first time.

Kiskatinaw Bridge

A short drive north of Dawson Creek (15 miles, 25 kms) and just off the Alaska Highway, is the beautiful wooden curved Kiskatinaw River Bridge. As you wind your way into the valley, watch for the unmarked roadside pull off on the north side of the river where you get a great view of the bridge. The bridge is a marvel of engineering that took as long to build as the whole Alaska Highway. It is still load bearing and can be easily driven or walked across.

The provincial park on the south side of the river is a great place to appreciate the bridge construction.

With 28 campsites, there's plenty of room to overnight, hike the heights of the riverbanks or enjoy an evening of fishing in this tranquil natural spot.

Kiskatinaw Bridge QUICK FACTS

- "Kiskatinaw" means "Cutbank" in Cree, one of the local Aboriginal languages.
- Approximately 500,000 board feet of creosoted British Columbia fir was used in the construction, shipped from coastal BC.
- The bridge was destroyed early in construction by ice jams that broke loose and crushed it.
- More than 100 men worked to build the bridge.
- During construction, a workman slipped and fell to his death on the ice below.
- A new bridge that bypassed the old Kiskatinaw Curved Wooden Bridge was built in 1978 when the highway was straightened.

Each building is appointed with furnishings from the era and there is an impressive collection of vintage cars, trucks and farm equipment as well as an old smithy and shoeing shop. There's a real harmonium you can play and the old school house has original wooden desks and chalkboards, something you just don't see anymore. Meet the Neighbours Route. Dawson Creek - Pouce Coupe - Rolla

Wear comfortable clothing and walking shoes or a pair of boots if it's been raining — our prairie mud is famous. And don't forget your binoculars and camera. The driving tour showcases special places where owners and locals are always up for a chat and know the area inside and out.

First Stop, Pouce Coupe! What a Curious Name. Be sure to pronounce it Pooce Coopy the way we do.

Orive south on Highway 2 (6.5 miles / 10 km) from Dawson Creek.

The Village of Pouce Coupe, is a small town with a huge history back to the days of the very earliest pioneers and beyond. Visit the museum in the middle of town for a sense of what life was like for the settlers.

Head for the original 1930 Wooden Train Trestle. Smell the creosote and imagine the old steam engines rumbling over high above the Bissette River below. You'll be impressed by the sheer size of it.

Check out the historic Hart Hotel, built in 1928 and still in use to this day, you can find out more interesting details about the village history and enjoy a refreshing beverage.

Get your camera ready to photograph the life-sized wooden figures around the pub and find out about the locals they represent — sort of our local version of having a statue dedicated to you but no big donation required. You'll meet George. He's made of wood and has occupied the seat in the middle of the bar for many years now. He's actually a local horseman who's been known to ride into town and stop at the Hart for a beer. He and some buddies rode their horses right into the bar one night. If you don't believe it, there's a photo that proves it.

Ready to Roll Again?

Orive north on Highway 2 and watch for the righthand turn on to the Rolla/Spirit River Road. You'll snake your way down and up out of the "Snake Pit" as the locals call it, actually the Dawson Creek, and back up onto the Rolla Prairie.

Welcome to grain country! The Peace River Country was built on agriculture. The primary crops these days are canola for oil, wheat for bread and hay for livestock. The view to the east reaches all the way to the Alberta border.

Next stop, McQueen's Slough! Birdwatcher's Paradise.

• Watch for a small blue sign with a pair of binoculars on it on the right-hand side of the road and prepare to turn at the next entrance on your left.

Operated and maintained by Ducks Unlimited, this wetland is home to thousands of birds. A birdwatcher's paradise and a special treat for ornithologists, you should find many species to check off your Life List.

There's a half-mile boardwalk for safe walking and viewing platforms where you can set up your tripod or relax and watch Nature's show. On-site signage illustrates the different species.

Last Stop, the Rolla Pub, truly an experience you'll never forget.

Back on the road, a few minutes north, your next stop is the Rolla Pub, constructed in 1920 in the hamlet of Rolla which was once the largest town in the region.

Patty, a dedicated historian and storyteller will greet you with a warm, smiling welcome. Grab a drink and step back in history. Every square inch of the walls and ceiling is covered with photographs, art and collectables you won't see anywhere else! It's more like a private and very eclectic museum and Patty is your host with the history, her love and passion.

In the evenings, there's often a group of locals and a game of shuffleboard going on. If there's no live band, the jukebox will be playing and you can share a table with the locals and catch up on the news from around.

THE ART SCENE

Grain Elevator Art Gallery

A must-see when you visit Dawson Creek is our grain elevator art gallery. You'll be amazed by this unique building and enjoy shopping for one-of-a-kind art pieces and souvenirs.

Once the grain capital of North America (in the 1930s), Dawson Creek boasted 11 elevators dating back to the 1920s. Lined majestically along what became Alaska Avenue, by 1984, only one elevator remained and it was slated for demolition.

That is until a group of visionary artists and one willing architect came up with a radical idea to preserve it. In a matter of weeks, the group had purchased the elevator, found land to relocate it and managed the move of the elevator from the west end of town to the east where it now stands in the NAR (Northern Alberta Railway) Park. This is all the more astonishing when you realize the combined weight of the elevator, the tallest building to the west, plus the annex, that houses the gallery, is 750,000 lbs!

Dawson Creek's iconic skyline structure is a one-of-akind art gallery. Stroll the ramp that spirals up and around the interior walls to view the art on display. History buffs will want to take the stairs down to see the vintage photographs that tell the story of the construction of the highway.

You won't want to miss The Grainery Artisan and Gift Shop located in the main gallery space either. Original works of art, high quality locally made crafts and highway souvenirs are on sale. Come on in, take a stroll up the 3-storey ramp, enjoy the art, the building and a pleasant browse through the gift shop.

Bus and Tour groups welcome and we are wheelchair accessible.

Public Schools

State-of-the-art education is provided in School District #59 (Peace River South). All grades are offered through a network of 16 elementary and 4 secondary schools, and a distributed learning school for alternative education methods, which are located in the city of Dawson Creek and the surrounding areas. Dawson Creek is also the administrative centre for School District #59, providing exceptional education services across the entire South Peace region, including the communities of Tumbler Ridge, Chetwynd, Rolla and Pouce Coupe. School District #59 is recognized as a provincial leader in education and technology and in the analysis of individual student performance from K-12. Further, all schools are equipped with a telecommunications system that allows for skills development in online research and information technology. Dawson Creek Secondary School, South Peace Campus is home to the South Peace Distributed Learning for rural residents and those choosing a home based education that permits students to graduate with a Provincial Dogwood diploma. Distributed Learning can also be blended with regular programming to provide students with the flexibility they may be looking for.

In addition, School District #59 has a reputation throughout the province for being a leader in creating innovative and progressive career development opportunities for students. The Board of Education is committed to providing a wide range of graduation pathways for our students to move from high school to the workplace and to post-secondary education. The key to creating these options is a unique partnership with Northern Lights College (NLC), where they provide expertise and training for numerous post secondary options. This means that the full range of trades programs offered by NLC are available to high school students through the dual-credit agreements. In addition, students are also receiving credits for first-year university courses while in high school using the dual credit model. The opportunities within the robust economy of the northeast are many; most School District #59 students graduating on dual-credit trades programs are employed in their chosen trade within days of graduation.

Early learning opportunities are abundant in School District #59. There are nine StrongStart Early Learning Centres throughout the School District. Tremblay is an early learning hub with the first outdoor playground for 18 month to 5 year olds. It also hosts MunchkinLand, a miniature community for kids to explore. In 2011 a new Early Learning Hub opened behind Dawson Creek Secondary, South Peace Campus. This includes a wonderful, indoor playground. Dawson Creek is truly a "destination community" for innovation in educational opportunities and student learning.

HEALTHCARE.

The Northern Health Authority is responsible for the delivery of health care across Northern BC, including Dawson Creek. The Dawson Creek & District Hospital is a 31 acute care bed facility where residents and guests can access acute care or physician services 24 hours a day in the emergency department. The hospital provides full medical and surgical services. In 2010, the opening of the newly renovated Cancer Care Unit at the Hospital, allows residents to receive treatment locally instead of travelling to Alberta or southern BC. There are several family physician practices in the City as well as visiting specialists. Many other health services are available including physiotherapy, chiropractors, massage therapists and several dental clinics. The Dawson Creek Hospital has a 15 bed Acute Psychiatric Unit servicing the Northeast.

Dawson Creek's youngest citizens with special needs find quality care at the Child Development Centre (CDC).

Infants and children may be referred to this paediatric rehabilitation centre for assessment and treatment of developmental delays or other disabilities.

Seniors in Dawson Creek and the surrounding area rely on the services of the continuing care facility, Rotary Manor. This facility offers recreational and social activities, nursing services, bathing, consultations with physiotherapists and dietary and foot care nurses all within comfortable environments. Furthermore, Rotary Manor offers the Day Away program. The program is designed for independent seniors and focuses on maintaining and improving the individual's social, physical, psychological and emotional capabilities while promoting a maximum level of independence. Most importantly, it lets seniors have fun.

Parks

The City of Dawson Creek's Community Services Department has successfully partnered with various community groups in providing the community with many beautifying/citizen friendly projects. Examples of this include the new Rotary covered bridge, installation of a toddler playground at Rotary Lake with Success by Six and construction of a senior's fitness facility in Kin Park with the provincial government. We implemented the Tree Hazard Evaluation program, the Dawson Creek Urban Forestry Policy, as well as an irrigation scheduling program and continuing with planting a number of caliber trees throughout the city.

Xeriscaping is not new to the City; look around the community and take in the many beautification beds which enhance our community. The Traffic Circle bed was designed for low maintenance, reducing costs by using products and materials such as topsoil, compost and wood mulch, which is recycled and reused from other areas of the city. The efficiency of the new bed design lowers maintenance costs while providing a clean, sustainable and aesthetically enhanced appearance to our community.

The city purchased self-watering planters for flowers and vegetables that require less watering. They reduce watering time, conserve water and provide enjoyment and nourishment with garden fresh tomatoes.

Dawson Trail Walking Path

Kin Park is host to the Dawson Trail, a 2.8 miles/4.5 km walking path that winds through scenic Kin Park from 8th Street to the Mile 0 Campground. Memorial Benches and Rocks of Interest are placed along the trail for you to use and enjoy. This path, which is used year round, was built through the partnership of the Oilmen's Association, the Rotary Club, the Kin and Kinsmen Clubs of Dawson Creek and the City of Dawson Creek.

ENERGY

Oil & Gas

The northeastern region of the province has been a focus of petroleum exploration and development since 1952. The region is located in the Western Canada Sedimentary Basin, and the focus of natural gas interests includes the Montney Play, Horn River Basin, Liard Basin and Cordova Embayment. The northeast is currently the only area of BC producing commercial quantities of oil and gas.

Renewable Energy

Peace Energy Cooperative (PEC) promotes the development, adoption and education of clean, renewable energy resources in the Peace Region and is committed to providing its 400+ cooperative members the opportunity to participate in, and profit from, investment in renewable energy developments. The first large focus for PEC was the development of the Bear Mountain Wind Park, 15 kilometres from Dawson Creek, which was commissioned in the fall of 2009.

Bear Mountain Wind Park

To the west of Dawson Creek you can see them for miles in every direction; a line of tall, white wind towers along Bear Mountain Ridge. If you think they look big from the road, wait until you're standing beneath one of them.

Among the largest wind turbines in the world with a generating capacity of 3 mega watts, each turbine stands 255 feet (78 metres) tall at the hub.

Just 20 minutes from town, a trip to the park is an enjoyable half-day of hiking with spectacular views all the way to the Rocky Mountains. Be sure to wear your boots or sneakers and pack some water. Before you go, drop by one of the cafés in town for a picnic lunch to enjoy as you take in the magnificent views from the Rim Rocks Hiking Trail.

The gravel road to the towers is easily accessible. Although it can be a bit rough in spots, trucks and cars will have no difficulty. Pick up the brochure and map, and check road conditions at the Visitor Centre before you head up.

FORESTRY

RATES OF

ACL THE

Dawson Creek's 2.9 million hectare portion of the Peace Forest District provides an estimated 1,700 jobs, including truck drivers, equipment operators and camp crews.

Spruce, pine, balsam, and aspen are harvested in quantities large enough to build more than 33,000 homes annually. The local Ministry of Forests, Lands and Natural Resource Operations staff administers and implements forest and range regulations and license agreements in addition to providing forest protection against fires, insects and disease. An extensive silviculture program is in place in the forests surrounding Dawson Creek. In addition, the local office is now responsible for Water Stewardship, as well as the local FrontCounter BC office.

MANUFACTURING

The area's resource base is further supported by a number of value-added manufacturing plants.

Louisiana Pacific Canada Ltd. has been operating a manufacturing facility in Dawson Creek since 1987, and currently manufactures TechShield® radiant barrier at this plant. TechShield® is a cost effective way to increase the energy efficiency of homes in hot southern climates, preventing up to 97% of the sun's radiant heat absorbed through the roof from entering attics. The product is made by laminating aluminum onto Oriented Strand Board (OSB), and then perforating for venting.

CONSTRUCTION

Development can be seen across the city and one of the places where it seems to be growing extremely quickly is the area around the airport on Highway 2. For the most part these developments are industrial/commercial with trucking companies and oil & gas sector companies being built.

Total value of construction permits issued by the City of Dawson Creek for 2015 was $30,370,774.00 . Of the 107 permits issued 75 were new residential units created. 75 permits sold broke down into residential permits realizing $15,935,709.00 while non residential came in at a value of $9,755,300.00.

For more information on Dawson Creek construction and property values refer to the Dawson Creek Community Profile & Investment Guide which can be picked up at City Hall or downloaded at www.dawsoncreek.ca/business

AGRICULTURE

Dawson Creek is centrally located in the Peace Region and is naturally the service and sales centre for the agriculture community.

Large portions of the city's businesses directly service the agriculture industry. Farms in the region enjoy somewhat of an advantage due to relatively mid to low land prices and the versatile Peace Country soil presents opportunities for production of a variety of grain, oil seed, and grass seed. The area's close proximity to West Coast grain terminals is also a significant cost advantage relative to some areas of the Prairie Provinces.

Crops

The dominant annual crops are the traditional prairie crops; wheat, oats, barley, and canola. Almost 90% of BC's grain and 95% of BC's canola are produced in the Peace, as well as 90% of the dry field peas and 95% of forage seeds.

The Peace is a prime area for producing exceptional quality grass seeds. As one of Canada's most northern farming regions, the Peace benefits from long daylight hours during the summer, allowing for the production of crops which benefit from the special long day length conditions.

BC Grain Producers Research Facility

One goal of the BC Grain Producers Association (BCGPA) is to improve the viability of the grains and oilseed industry in the BC Peace River region.

The BC Grain Producers Association has been conducting field crop research in the area for over twenty years and opened an excellent new research facility in Dawson Creek in 2009. The researchers now have access to offices, a spacious warehouse, and labs. One lab is used for seed handling and features proper vacuum ventilation for working with treated seed, and the second lab is designed for handling harvested materials. Current field research studies the potential of crops new to the region and ways to improve yield and maturity for existing commodity crops. Such work involves partnering with a dozen public and private plant breeders across Canada.

With this new high-quality research facility, the BCGPA can continue to carry out important research for the betterment of agriculture in the Peace Region.

Organic Crops

The pristine environment in the Peace makes it very suitable for taking advantage of North America's growing interest in organic crops. The Peace River Organic Producers Association (PROPA) reports that a growing number of farms across the Peace bio region are now producing certified organic beef, bison, poultry, hogs, eggs, wheat, barley, herbs, hay, oil seeds, peas, as well as table and seed potatoes, with more than 50,000 acres in the organic certification program.

Livestock

Of all the agricultural production in the Peace, livestock operations show perhaps the greatest potential. The abundance of space and quality feed have boosted the traditional beef cattle industries; with the Peace River cow/calf herd now one of the largest in BC. Peace livestock production also includes horses, dairy cattle, bison, sheep, and goats.

Areas of potential growth and diversification include livestock finishing, dairy and eggs, and expanded game farming. The only inspected livestock slaughter facility in the region is located in Dawson Creek.
